•]	He was asked at a conversation at University, "As a business leader, what would you like your legacy to be?
	His answer: I'm going to retire in a year-and-a-half and I would like my legacy to be that I have left the company a good place to work in, one that has made a lot of people's lives better. My tendency is not to take great risks of any kind in the sense I don't try to take ethical risks, and I don't try to take big business risks. I want to know that I have protected people's savings and their well-being and their jobs, and that they have been left feeling good about themselves with their, the company's, and my reputation intact.
